APPLE ORCHARDS.

Will It Pay to Plant Apple Trees in Southeast Missouri.

FARMINGTON NURSERIES AND GREENHOUSES, FARMINGTON, MO., MARCH 30, 1906.

Will it pay to plant apple trees in Southeast Missouri? As a paying proposition I will answer you, "yes" and "no." If you will plant the right varieties, on land that is suitable; avoid wet land and have it somewhat elevated above the surrounding country so as to give it good air and drainage, and plant two-year-old trees headed low, say 15 to 20 inches, and never prune (if you commence pruning you will have to keep it up), and cultivate well the first four years; put the land in vegetables, vines or corn, and at least two crops of cow peas in the fifth or sixth year you cultivate, then seed down to clover and mow the land once or twice a year, you will raise apple trees which will bear three full crops out of six, and that is as often as a tree should bear to live long. In addition to cultivating the orchard in crops the first five years, you should take your hoe and give them at least two good hoeings around the trees, then put around the trees about a pint of strong wood ashes; and if the land is poor and worn out, put a shovel of manure around the trees, but never in the hole where you plant them, as that is almost certain death. Do not plant any deeper than the trees grow in the nursery, and only plant a few kinds that have done well in your neighborhood. For winter sorts I will mention the order of my choice varieties that seem to do well almost everywhere: Ingram, Winesap, Ben Davis, Gano, York and Imperial. It would be well to plant only two or three of these varieties. For late fall and early winter the Jonathan and Grimes' Golden do well.

I will mention here that one of the most important things to understand is, when to gather the fruit. If you let it hang on the tree until ripe, you can never keep it. If you want apples to keep, gather as soon as the seeds begin to turn black. Gather the Winesap or Jonathan as soon as a part of the apples on the trees begin to turn pink; if you leave them hang until they turn red or almost black, you cannot keep them. Gather the Grimes' Golden when perfectly green. You will see occasionally an apple that is turned yellow; then is the time to pick them. We have no trouble keeping Jonathan and Grimes' until the middle of February.

Now, if you will observe these rules you can raise apples; and if you will plant enough to attract a buyer, you will make plenty of money. I have been a little slow to recommend the planting of apple orchards in Southeast Missouri, but after waiting and watching and seeing six seasons go by, I certainly do recommend planting, provided you follow these simple rules. I am sure I will be criticized, but all right. What I know I have learned by hard experience. I am well aware that a good many advocate plowing and pruning, and I did for 35 years, but do not now. If one half the land in St. Francois county that is suitable for apple growing had been in bearing orchards, it would have netted the farmers from $75 to $200 per acre, according to the care the trees had when small.

I gathered fruit from all over the country for the World's Fair, and will say I never saw finer fruit in my life; and when shown side by side with fruit from all over the country, I said, surely I am in a good apple section. I have a long list of apples planted out and may find something better, but none have shown up yet that beats the varieties I have named. So, beware of new-fangled sorts and buy sparingly of them. I keep trying them, but life is short. I watched the Ingram thirty-five years before I would recommend it in a commercial way.
